‘Long Shot’ director Jonathan Levine on the hilarious new film’s powerful message

PAT KING

ALL IMAGES LIONSGATE

As a society, it is staggering to see how far America still has to go when it comes to gender equality in the workforce, and even when it comes to fairness in the cult of personality that is our political system. No matter how qualified a politician truly is, female candidates face much more unrealistic scrutiny from both the public and their parties while running for higher office. This is a central point that the brand-new film “Long Shot,” starring Charlize Theron and Seth Rogen, puts into its crosshairs. And while this is a deeply ingrained problem in our country’s DNA, the film skewers it to perfection, creating one of the most poignant and honest satires to come out of a major film studio in recent memory.

Theron stars as Charlotte Field, U.S. Secretary of State, who is keeping the ship afloat under a bumbling ex-B-list TV star President Chambers, played with idiotic charm by Bob Odenkirk, who has fooled the public into believing he would be fit for the job after playing the commander in chief on TV. After a popular first term, Chambers decides that he has had enough of the job and sees this as the perfect opportunity to quit while he is ahead and make the next logical move in his career (a transition into film). With this decision, he gives his endorsement to Field for her run for president.

Once she hears the announcement, her team works tirelessly to improve her numbers with the public in a number of different areas including her awkward wave, which resembles an animatronic robot’s movements as it is running low on electricity. While at a fundraiser, Field meets up with an old childhood friend, a recently out-of-work journalist named Fred Flarsky, played by Seth Rogen. Taken by his exuberance and willingness to speak truth to power, Field hires him on her press tour as a speechwriter. As the tour goes on, their relationship becomes a little more than professional.

While this plan to gain more “likability” should be inconsequential given her sterling record as a public official, this kind of life under a microscopic for women of a certain stature is exactly the point that the film tries to address.

“It’s such an easy target and such a valid target that once you unlock that area of joke-telling, you really have unlimited potential for jokes,” says the film’s director, Jonathan Levine. “It kind of combines these two great things that we love: it’s a humorous way to hold up a mirror to ourselves, and it’s easy because it’s such low-hanging fruit in our society that it was a great place to find humor. Whenever you have those two things — an opportunity to look smart and an easy way to access them — that’s a nice thing in a comedy, especially when you are balancing so many different things.”

Levine was thrilled at the chance to show how insane it is that this kind of standard exists in our society, but has also been blown away by how female audiences have reacted during advance screenings of the film. The message is universal whether you are in politics or not.

“It was also really important for her [Field’s] story to show the insane endemic cultural misogyny that she’s up against every day,” Levine explains. “I think the thing about it is, it doesn’t just apply to politics. When we screen this, women of all walks of life see themselves in this character’s journey… the depth of it was quite eye-opening.”

Apart from the powerful social message the film so successfully hammers home, it also delivers on some of the best pure gut-busting laughs you are bound to see in theaters this summer. Most notably, a scene in which Field and Flarksy have been out clubbing all night on molly when she is suddenly called in for a tense hostage negotiation. Without any spoilers, it is a scene that is destined to be a classic.

What makes “Long Shot” so enjoyable is that its relevance to our current moment only heightens each laugh. Even though the plane might be on fire, satire done this well only helps to cushion the landing.

“Whenever you can deal with identity politics this way, it really is fertile ground for comedy,” says Levine. “There’s no laugh quite like the laugh of recognition.”

“Long Shot” also stars O’Shea Jackson Jr. and June Diane Raphael and hits theaters all over the world on Friday.

Pelosi accuses Barr of 'crime' as Democrats step up pressure on Trump

The White House, however, said the president is within his rights to instruct advisers.

Congressional Democrats stepped up pressure on President Donald Trump's administration on Thursday as U.S. House of Representatives Speaker Nancy Pelosi accused Attorney General William Barr of committing a crime and an influential committee chairman threatened to hold Barr in contempt of Congress.

In a defiant letter released on Thursday, the White House said Trump has the right to instruct advisers not to testify before congressional oversight probes related to the Special Counsel Robert Mueller's Russia inquiry and called Mueller's report on the matter defective.

The statements mark a sharp escalation in the conflict between Trump's administration and Democrats in Congress, who are weighing whether they should try to remove Trump from office using the impeachment process as they demand information on his taxes, his businesses and other topics.

Democrats accused the Republican president and his administration of launching a growing attack on American democracy.

Pelosi, the top Democrat in Congress, accused Barr of lying to lawmakers about his interactions with Mueller after the special counsel concluded his 22-month investigation into Russia's efforts to interfere in the 2016 U.S. election to boost Trump's candidacy.

"That's a crime," the top Democrat in Congress told reporters, referring to Barr's congressional testimony.

> "I think that the statements being made by the president of the United States as giving a blanket statement that he's not going to honor any subpoenas is obstruction of justice."
> Nancy Pelosi, House of Representatives speaker

Justice Department spokeswoman Kerri Kupec called Pelosi's allegation "reckless, irresponsible and false."

The exchange came shortly after House Judiciary Committee Chairman Jerrold Nadler threatened to hold Barr in contempt of Congress if he does not provide a full, unredacted copy of Mueller's findings. That could potentially lead to fines or imprisonment for the top U.S. law enforcement official.

Barr released Mueller's report on April 18, with some parts blacked out to protect sensitive information.

Pelosi and other leaders in the House, which is controlled by Democrats, previously had cautioned against launching the impeachment process, which would begin in the House but would face long odds of success in the Republican-controlled Senate and could alienate voters ahead of the 2020 presidential election in which Trump is seeking re-election.

But Pelosi said the Trump administration was continuing to ignore congressional subpoenas and noted that Congress launched impeachment proceedings against President Richard Nixon in the 1970s after he resisted similar demands. Nixon resigned in 1974.

"I think that the statements being made by the president of the United States as giving a blanket statement that he's not going to honor any subpoenas is obstruction of justice," Pelosi said. REUTERS

House backs Paris agreement in first climate bill in a decade

Senate leader McConnell called the bill "political theater."

REUTERS

The U.S. House of Representatives on Thursday passed its first climate-change bill in a decade, voting 231-190 to require that the Trump administration keep the United States as a party to the Paris Climate Agreement.

The Climate Action Now Act would require President Donald Trump to develop a plan for the United States to meet the goals it committed to in the Paris agreement to reduce its greenhouse gas emissions and block federal funds from being used to advance the formal U.S. withdrawal from the pact.

Trump has stood by his 2017 decision to withdraw the United States from the 2015 climate accord and has been dismissive of regulations aimed at slashing greenhouse gas emissions.

The bill, which passed along party lines, as expected, with three Republicans backing the measure, was meant to signal to the international community that many Americans support the Paris agreement regardless of Trump's decision to abandon it.

"Today we sent a message to the president, to the American people and to the world that we recognize the seriousness of the climate crisis, and that we intend to do our part to address it. Today we sent the message: We are still in," said Rep. Frank Pallone, chairman of the House energy committee.

Senate majority leader Mitch McConnell said the Senate would not take up the legislation, dismissing the bill as "political theater" by Democrats.

Democrats have put climate change back on the agenda in Congress after regaining the majority in the House earlier this year, holding dozens of hearings on the issue.

Many of the Democratic candidates hoping to challenge Trump in the 2020 presidential election have made climate change a top-tier issue of their campaigns. All have backed re-entering the United States into the Paris Climate Agreement. REUTERS

Moore withdraws from consideration for Fed post

President Donald Trump's pick to fill a seat on the Federal Reserve has withdrawn from consideration after weeks of criticism against economic commentator Stephen Moore's shifting views on interest rate policy and sexist comments about women.

"Steve Moore, a great pro-growth economist and a truly fine person, has decided to withdraw from the Fed process," Trump said on Twitter on Thursday. "Steve won the battle of ideas including Tax Cuts .... and deregulation which have produced non-inflationary prosperity for all Americans. I've asked Steve to work with me toward future economic growth in our Country."

Just hours earlier, Moore had told Bloomberg TV that he was "all in" and that he expected to be nominated within three weeks.

Moore, 59, was picked by Trump in March to fill one of two vacant positions at the Fed, but had not been formally nominated. Trump's other pick for the Fed, former presidential candidate and businessman Herman Cain, withdrew from consideration in mid-April.

Stephen Moore of The Heritage Foundation is interviewed by CQ in his Washington office. TOM WILLIAMS

At the Fed, Moore would have had a permanent vote on setting interest rates for at least five years and as many as 11 years, depending on which of two vacant posts he would have occupied.

His loyalty to Trump worried some lawmakers, concerned that his partisanship could threaten the Fed's independence, seen as critical to the central bank's ability to conduct policy effectively.

But it was Moore's history of sexist comments about women, both jokingly and not, that appeared to most hurt his prospects, with Republican senators including Joni Ernst citing those remarks for their opposition to, or at least hesitation over, Moore.

In one column that Moore has since apologized for, Moore joked that women should not referee men's basketball games and suggested they should not be in military combat. In another in 2014, Moore said that if women were paid more than men, society could be destabilized.

A fellow at the conservative Heritage Foundation whose past jobs include writing editorials for the Wall Street Journal and policy pieces for the libertarian Cato Institute, Moore has a long track record of supporting Republican causes, chief among them tax cuts. In 1999 he founded the Club for Growth to raise money for like-minded politicians, and ran it until 1994.

Moore said less about monetary policy than fiscal policy over the years, and his views have been less consistent. As recently as September 2015 he called for eliminating the U.S. central bank and removing then-Fed Chair Janet Yellen, who he said was keeping money too easy.

More recently, Moore called for the firing of Fed Chairman Jerome Powell after the central bank raised interest rates in December and, like Trump, he has called for rate cuts this year. REUTERS

UNIDENTIFIED SERVICE DOGS

Is this lawful or sanitary for the food and customers? Not to mention those who are allergic to dogs. The law prohibits dogs in stores unless they are service dogs identified by a vest or tag for emotional support and for handicapped patrons. They are unsanitary! Why? Simply because they walk in spit, poop and urine and it's lodged in their paws. E. coli has been traced to the paws also. Dogs drool and shake their fur, which contains insects and pet dander. Unless blind, why do you need to food-shop with a dog? I spoke with the store manager and was told that there is a sign posted on the door and rightfully they are allowed inside. Dog owners get offended when asked if they are service dogs. They wouldn't be questioned if the dogs had visible service identification like a vest or tag. This is annoying to me. Let your dog be happy to see you when you come home from food shopping. Don't forget the treats!

Where to watch the Kentucky Derby

Throw on your best hat and get ready to sip those mint juleps, because it's racing time!

PAT KING

With Cinco de Mayo coming up this Sunday, chances are you are preordering that bacon, egg, and cheese to be delivered to your door on Monday morning to go with your ibuprofen before you have to head out to work. But if you are planning on taking it easy this Sunday, feel free to put on your seersucker suit and have a couple of mint juleps while watching the biggest horse race of the season, the Kentucky Derby. Here are some of the best places to watch "the most exciting two minutes in sports" around the city this Saturday.

Dress to impress at Ocean Prime

This modern American restaurant located on West 52nd Street will be hosting a Kentucky Derby bash with the best kind of partner you could ask for, given the occasion: a whiskey company! The restaurant, owned by famed restaurateur Cameron Mitchell, will be partnering with Hudson Whiskey for a day full of specialty cocktails, snacks and prizes. Guests can choose to enter the costume contest where the person dressed in the best "Derby attire" will win a free bottle of Hudson Whiskey for getting into the spirit.

Saturday, May 4, 3:30-7 p.m., Ocean Prime, 123 W. 52nd St., free

Downtown Derby Party at The Crown Rooftop at Hotel 50 Bowery

The Crown Rooftop at the Hotel 50 Bowery recently just opened for the season and will be hosting a big party this Saturday in honor of the Derby for their "Royal Summer" series. Guests will be able to soak up the sunshine while they sip on mint juleps provided by Woodford Reserve and other refreshing beverages from other sponsors Veuve Cliquot, Angry Orchard Rosé and Hampton Water Rosé. Snacks will also be provided from the Crown's newly revamped food menu. So bring your most over-the-top hat, grab a racing form, and get some sun!

Saturday, May 4, 2:30 p.m., The Crown Rooftop, 50 Bowery, RSVP to thecrown@50bowery.com.

Makers Mark Gin at the Understudy at DeKalb Market

If whiskey or bourbon isn't your thing, the speakeasy-style bar Understudy at DeKalb Market in Downtown Brooklyn will have you covered this Derby Day. The bar will be partnering with Makers Mark Gin to serve a gin-only drink menu for a free viewing of the race. For their partnership, Makers Mark will be taking a pound of garbage out of the ocean for every gin mint julep sold, so looks like you will be doing a good deed while getting your buzz on! The first 10 people to order a julep will also get their drink for half price, so make sure to get there early.

Saturday, May 4, noon, Understudy at DeKalb Market, 445 Albee Sq., free

Women's hockey players to boycott pro league play

Players hope it will force the NHL to offer more support for women's hockey.

A group of more than 200 women hockey players announced Thursday they will not play in any pro hockey league until changes are made.

"We cannot make a sustainable living playing in the current state of the professional game," said a statement from the group, released by individual players on social media Thursday. "Having no health insurance and making as low as two thousand dollars a season means players can't adequately train and prepare to play at the highest level.

"Because of that, together as players, we will not play in ANY professional leagues in North America this season until we get the resources that professional hockey demands and deserves."

The group includes players such as Team USA stars Kendall Coyne Sheffield and Hilary Knight, as well as Marie Philip-Poulin of Team Canada.

Hilary Knight. GETTY IMAGES

The future of professional women's hockey has moved to the forefront since the Canadian Women's Hockey League announced in March that is would fold in May after 12 years in operation, citing financial reasons.

ESPN reported Thursday that players hope their stand will urge the NHL to take action to support women's professional hockey.

The U.S.-based National Women's Hockey League now is the only professional hockey league for women in North America.

"As long as elite women hockey players have professional opportunities, it is not an environment we are prepared to wade into in any formal way," NHL deputy commissioner Bill Daly told ESPN when the CWHL folded. "We have always supported professional women's hockey, and we plan to continue to do so. That doesn't mean we need to form or directly subsidize an existing professional league."

The NHL previously gave $50,000 a year to each of the women's pro leagues in North America. It raised its contribution to the NWHL to $100,000 with the announcement of the folding of the CWHL, according to ESPN. REUTERS

Vegan burger maker Beyond Meat sizzles in market debut

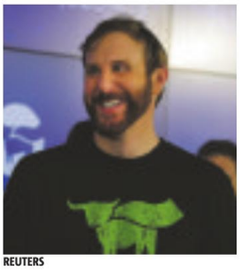
Shares of vegan burger maker Beyond Meat surged 84 percent in their market debut on Thursday, as investors look to cash in on the growing popularity of plant-based meat alternatives.

The stock opened at $46, well above its IPO price of $25, giving Beyond Meat a market capitalization of around $2.75 billion, including underwriters' option.

Shares surged to $50 just minutes after starting to trade and were halted due to volatility. They have since resumed trading at more than $59.

Earlier on Tuesday, the company raised the size and price of its offering after increased demand from investors. The IPO raised $240 million.

The money raised from the IPO gives Beyond Meat firepower to compete with other rivals in the increasingly crowded imitation meat market, such as Silicon Valley startup Impossible Foods.



REUTERS

Beyond Meat founder and CEO Ethan Brown on Thursday morning at the Nasdaq stock exchange called plant-based meat an "enormous opportunity for economic growth in rural America and throughout the world."

"We understand the composition of meat, we understand the architecture and year after year we collapse the gaps between our product and animal protein," Brown said of Beyond Meat, which counts actor Leonardo DiCaprio and Microsoft founder Bill Gates among its investors.

Beyond Meat's existing stockholders did not sell any shares in the offering.

The company aims to market its meatless burger patties and other products to meat-loving consumers by avoiding terms such as vegan or vegetarian and instead displaying its products in the meat case of supermarkets.

Plant-based substitutes for meat have been gaining popularity as more people shift toward vegan or vegetarian diets, amid growing concerns about animal welfare and the environmental hazards of intensive animal farming.

Tyson Foods Inc., the No. 1 U.S. meat processor, owned a 6.5 percent stake in Beyond Meat, but last week said it sold its holding, as it looks to develop its own line of alternative protein products.

Burger King and Impossible Foods last month started selling their vegan burger Impossible Whopper in and around St. Louis, Missouri, with nationwide sales expected by the end of the year. REUTERS

Derby Day is one of the more unique days on the sports calendar as non-sports fans routinely get in on the action, along with the diehards.

The aura that any horse, and more importantly any bettor, can win big will be alive and well on Saturday for the 145th Kentucky Derby (6:30 p.m., NBC).

If you're betting on your first Kentucky Derby, your best bet is to go to the top online horse racing site at NYRABets.com/MetroBet.

By entering promo code MetroBet25 at NYRABets.com/MetroBet you will receive a free $25 Derby bet and a $200 new-member bonus.

Here's a look at the 2019 Derby field and a MetroBet pick.

GAME WINNER (4-1) inherited the favorite's role after Omaha Beach was scratched due to a breathing issue. GAME WINNER looks vulnerable based on his first two starts of 2019, dropping both the Rebel and Santa Anita Derby, so we'll look elsewhere for a winner.

TACITUS (8-1) makes just his fifth career start in the Kentucky Derby after visiting the winner's circle in three of his first four efforts for renowned trainer Bill Mott. He rallied late to take the Tampa Bay Derby off a four-month layoff two starts ago before turning back TAX in Aqueduct's Wood Memorial. Jose Ortiz, second in last year's Kentucky Derby with Good Magic, maintains the assignment on TACITUS, who should get a solid pace to work with on Saturday. TACITUS is bred to love going long.

TAX (20-1) is an intriguing starter for more low-profile connections in trainer Danny Gargan and jockey Junior Alvarado. He's produced respectable speed figures in his last three starts, all in 1 1/8-mile stakes races. TAX won the Withers to kick off his three-year-old campaign before running a game second to TACITUS in the Wood Memorial. Based on the eye test as well as his pedigree (by Arch out of a Giant's Causeway mare), it seems that TAX will truly relish the 1 1/4-mile Derby distance. If this colt manages to pull off the upset, it would be the first-ever Triple Crown race victory for both Gargan and Alvarado.
